

Actions against Snow Damage

What if Heavy Snow Falls?

Avoid going out.

When snow falls very heavily, it is likely that public transportation stops, expressways are closed, and that general roads cannot be used. When heavy snow is forecast, return home early and avoid going out.

When you are indoors

When you are indoors, check the air inlet/outlet of the heater as it may cause carbon monoxide poisoning if it is blocked by snow.

While you are driving

You may lose visibility because of blown-up snow on the road. Check the weather forecast and road information and go home early.

While you are walking or working outdoors

You may lose your sense of direction and fail to sense where you are because of poor visibility. Evacuate to a safe place early.

Preparations for Heavy Snowfall

Inside your home

When heavy snowfall is predicted by the weather forecast, store food so that you don't need to go out and make heating means available to warm yourself without power in case of a power outage.

Inside your car

When you have to go out for an unavoidable reason, make the things you need in case your car stops (such as water, food, and clothes or protection against cold weather) available inside your car and check the fuel in advance.
